NO. VII.

The act of Nov. 4, 1815, is, in many respects a precidir appenience of highlightim. In accretal instances it re-centure of highlightim of them to secone the object on they had in view; —and a principal object doubtless was to secure the permising principal object doubtless was to secure the permising majorized and the clerks, and that interest was advanced in the pussage under consideration.

As instance of the loose and indefinite character of the act will be seen in the following clause in Sec. 10, which provides, 'that if a clerk shall neglect to pay over money, &c., the State's Attorney shall be notified by the proper officer.' Who is this proper officer, the treasurer, or auditor, or neither? Why is this left in definite? Why is the law left thus vague, when a clerk is to be called to an account? If it were designed that the treasurer should notify the State's Attorney to commence a prosecution on a clerk's official bond, why not say so? The asme may be said of the auditor or any other proper officer. No one would wish to examine the day specified and the proper officer. No one would wish to examine the law lattened that duty upon him. It permits an officer of any other proper officer. No one would wish to say, that he is not the proper officer, and that the day belongs to some one clee, while the delinquent will escape between both.

By the act of 1811, clerks were to receive for entering each judgment in the Supreme court, 75 cts., 'Including recording the same, and in the County County.' County Court.' Including recording the same, and in the County County.' Court of the proper of the same of the proper of the clerk of the delinquent will escape between both.

By the act of 1811, clerks were to receive for entering each judgment in the Supreme court, 75 cts., 'Including recording the same, and in the County Court.' Courty Court.' Courty Courts.' Including recording the same court, 75 cts., 'Including recording the same court, and in the County Court.' Courts Courts.' Courts Courts.' Courts Courts and the court of the courts of the proper of the courts of the same of the proper of the courts of the proper of the courts of the courts of the

By the act of 1821, clerks were to receive for entering each judgment in the Supreme court, 75 cts., 'including recording the same,' and in the County Court for entering each judgment on this,' including recording the same,' 40 cts. In the Revised Statutes, the fees are the same but the words, 'including recording the same,' are omitted. This has given occasion to the clerks to charge for recording judgments; and some varying from 50 cts. to $3.00 and clerks to charge for recording judgments; and sums varying from 50 cts. to $5,00 and perhaps more, have been charged for that service, all which would have been prevented by retaining the words, including recording the same.' This is introduced here to show the importance of even a few words, in the construction and effect of a statute. The question arises, was this innovation in the fee bill in favor of clerks, the effect of received or desired. Deathing the latter, for me, and the contemporature of the restore that we have the latter of the feel of t and effect of a statute. The question arises, was this innovation in the fee bill in favor of clerks, the effect of accident of design f. Doubtless the latter, for we are not to suppose that the committee of revision, three of whom were or had been clerks of courts, did not understand the operation of such an omission as a including recording the same.' So in the act of 1845, we think it quite apparent, that the purpose was to legislate for the benefit of a particular class of officers, and it is reasonable to believe that policy would induce the framers of that bill to make as title display of that purpose as practicable. Had a bill been proposed to the legislature to substitute court orders for cash payments on all contingent expenses of courts, there would have been little fear of passing such a taw. Still the same thing is effected, by management and indirection on all callings for incidental expenses of courts, with the exception of jorors' and witnesses' debentures. Had a law been proposed to give to 14 different tribunals, the power to settle all pailors' eccounts for boarding and supporting State's prisoners, and State papapers in the power to settle all pailors' eccounts for boarding and supporting State's prisoners, and State papapers in the State, instead of continuing the law which gave jurisdiction to one board in all these cases, there would have been little fear that such a law could have passed, and yet this important innovation has been accomplished by nine short words added to the Sd section of that act.

Had a law been proposed to the Legislature to allow

Had a law been proposed to the Legislature to allow all clerks of courts to present their accounts to any one judge or chancellor in the State, and that they might appoint 'any other person to settle those accounts,' and that any judge or chancellor might immediately draw an order for the sum which such 'any other person' should allow, without the possibility of any supervision or correction of errors, such law would not have been passed; —atill the law of 1845 has accomplished all this.

The 8th Sec. of the set of 1845 has accomplished all this.

The 8th Sec. of the act of 1845 provides for draw ing from the Treasury, by a clerk 's a much as he finis ancessary, to ap y jorns, Re, but it does not require the clerk to pay in money, whereas the section of the still the law of 1845 has accomplished all this receives on the State of the section of the still the law of 1845 has accomplished all this region of the clerk to have drawn, a less sum than required; could the not supply the deficiency by drawing orders on the State Treasury' and if any balance is due to the clerk therein, the treasure shall immediately provides that the last clease in the 9th section was inserted to meet just such a case. The Committee of Conference agreed upon a form of Notice, which passed both Houses of Congress on Thursday—the Senate by a voic of 40 to 10, and the House by a vote of 142 to 46. This is substantially the form of Notice first adopt ed by the Senate. The difference is shiefly in the phrascology. It was so viewed by Mr Allen of Oleo, and he voted against it, as did also Mr Cass.
